In a Sept. 5 tweet on X (formerly Twitter), Jordan accused the CCDH of feeding false information to the Biden White House. "The Biden [administration] then uses the full weight of the federal government to coerce Facebook to censor Americans, Biden's critics and political opponents and the truth," he continued.

The controversy began in March 2021 when the CCDH released a report about the so-called "Disinformation Dozen." The 12 accounts named in the report were allegedly responsible for 65 percent of anti-vaccine content on social media. However, the Ohio congressman pointed out the report's inaccuracy, stating that the actual number was closer to 0.05 percent – something that even Facebook itself recognized.

Nevertheless, the White House still embraced the CCDH's incorrect statistics and pressured Facebook to take action against these accounts. But the social media platform was reluctant, fearing that it could unfairly censor users who hadn't violated any rules. Internal documents suggest that Facebook employees were drafting a memo to Meta CEO Mark Zuckerberg indicating "pressure from ... the White House" to censor the Disinformation Dozen despite no clear justification.

Accounts from the Disinformation Dozen and their affiliates numbered to 34, yet only six out of this total were found to have violated policies. By July 2021, Facebook had censored 11 of the 12 accounts in the core group. Moreover, former White House Press Secretary Jen Psaki mentioned the Disinformation Dozen during a July 15, 2021 press briefing. CCDH mentioned in its report that "the Disinformation Dozen ... continually violate the terms of service agreements on Facebook and Twitter." Ty and Charlene Bollinger, Democratic presidential candidate Robert F. Kennedy Jr. and Dr. Joseph Mercola were some of the names included in the list of 12.

"While some anti-vaxxers identified by CCDH have been removed from a single platform, comprehensive action has yet to be taken, and most remain active on Facebook, Instagram and Twitter," the nonprofit reported on its website. It also claimed that "[d]eplatforming repeat offenders is the most effective way of stopping the proliferation of dangerous misinformation."
